Metamorphosis and Contamination:
The Permanency of Change

Within the framework of the Biennale de Lyon

ARTWORKS IN FOCUS AT THE IAC

From 18 September to 5 January 2020

Station 16 takes the artworks of the fifteenth Biennale de Lyon, entitled Là où les eaux se mêlent [Where Water Comes Together With Other Water] as its object of study. Based on an original idea by Raphaël Brunel, curator, and Julien Discrit, artist, after Station 14 (Matière et métabolismes), this edition pursues the exploration of matter, at once a vector and product of contamination and metamorphosis. This matter is probed as a possible paradigm for taking stock of the porosity and intermingling between the creatures of the cosmos and for recomposing a cosmomorphic world.

Metamorphosis and Contamination: The Permanency of Change

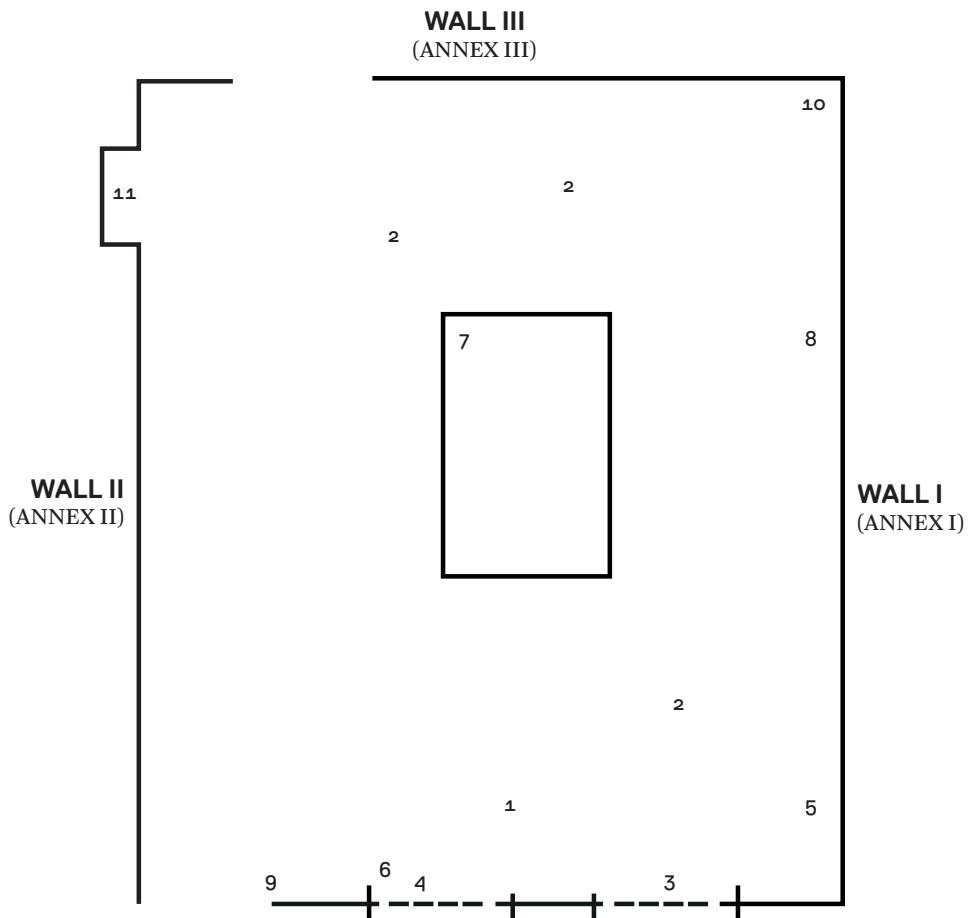

Irrespective of the terminology chosen to define it, the period that we are traversing is characterised by brutal transformations, operating as much on the scale of ecosystems and the climate as on that – cellular and molecular – of the body and matter. In addition, the permanent exchanges brought about by the coexistence of humans and non-humans ought to be considered from the point of view of a perpetual and reciprocal contamination. In certain cases, this becomes the source of confusion between the natural and the artificial. Any kind of sensitive interface placed into contact and in relation to an exogenic organism, substance, or technology thus evolves or becomes reconfigured.

To what extent do these logics of affection or infection produce a set of reciprocal effects, influences, or reactions, suitable for generating new and dynamic situations in which metamorphosis would be paramount within the organism, in which change would eventually turn out to be permanent ?

Based on an original idea by Raphaël Brunel, curator, and Julien Discrit, artist.
